Appreciative Note

Mattapoisett Selectmen will find overwhelming popular support for their unanimous vote not to allow a combined pinball machine-pool hall to start operations in Mattapoisett. The impossibility of supervision of such a setup was wisely put on the scales by the town fathers. There are some decisions that almost every responsible person can applaud and this is one of them.

This year Florence Eastman Post is paying tribute to a very worthy legionaire. Not only has he served his country with courage and distinction but he has served as 10th District commander from 1966-1967, a past commander of his Post and present adjutant.

The committee planning the affair is comprised of: Cliff Collins of Wareham, Donald Hacking of Wareham, Joseph Marcellino of New Bedford, Gabriel Botelho of South Dartmouth, Matthew Costa, Elmer Sylvia, Herbert Jennings, Manuel Roza and John N. DeCosta, chairman, all of Mattapoisett.

Tickets can be obtained from any member of the committee or any legionaire. They also are available at Tinkham's Pharmacy and Al's Barber Shop.

WHIST PARTY is open to the public.

There will be a whist party at the Marion Grange Hall Saturday, May 25th, at 8 P.M.

Miss Sparrow Memorial

A WAY TO REMEMBER AND TWO WAYS TO GIVE

According to Mrs. Marland I. Bryant, president of the Mattapoisett Historical Society, donations towards the tribute for a lasting recognition of the many years of devotion to the Society by the late Miss Minerva Sparrow, may take either one or both of two forms. Those supporting the project, and all are invited to do so, may contribute towards a fund "in memorium" or they may enlarge the scope of the Historical Society Museum itself by presenting in Miss Sparrow's memory one of their own antique treasures, large or small, for permanent display in the collections.

Checks should be made out to the Mattapoisett Historical Society and designated "In Memorium", and sent to Miss Lydia LeB. Walker, Box 172, Mattapoisett. Miss Walker reports that the amount of contributions is swelling, but that the majority of members of the Society are yet to be heard from. As this is a Banner Year for the group so long served by Miss Sparrow it is hoped that a large number will give small amounts in order to be represented. Contributions so far have ranged from one to five dollars each.

Among the many devoted services of Miss Sparrow to the historical collections of the Mattapoisett Museum was the mounting, labeling and cataloguing of pictures of the area and its persons and personages over more than a century of time. This was completed in the spring of 1968.

A Visitor's Impression

WINTER MORNING ON MATTAPOISETT WHARF

A Twentieth Century growth of concrete and barnacle-crusted wooden pilings points out into the harbor, holding fast the few pleasure-fishing boats still determined to brave the cold, choppy water. Everything is grey. The sky, bleak and dim in the early morning light, blends into the rolling fog. The fog rests on water of a similar dreary color. Only the water has texture as the foam-topped waves push toward land. The sea gulls are hard to spot in the sky as they soar over the wharf in their clever breakfast maneuvers. The gulls make little sound as they pluck small shellfish from the water and drop them from the sky onto the wharf. There is a cracking sound as the shells break open and the white birds swoop down to eat, then soar off to start the process over. Fog sharpens distant sounds and the fog horn at the entrance to the Cape Cod Ship Channel, around the point of land to the North, bellows in answer to the call of a ship coming in blind from the sea. Out there, too, is the soft clanging of the marker buoys as they rock endlessly in the choppy waves, marking the deep water passage. All that can be seen in the direction of these sounds are the wind-ravaged trees that follow the curve of the beach and the Victorian houses built long ago by affluent sea captains. These houses stand far apart in the hazy distance but are close together near the wharf, for the wharf is where the town began. South of the wharf, the land draws back and becomes a marsh, where the waves are calmed into ripples as they pass thru the slender marsh grass. Beyond the marsh is another long curve of tree-studded beach, this side all but uninhabited, that stretches out into the bay to complete the U-shaped harbor. As the fog begins to roll back to the sea, a few sailboats with naked masts can be seen bobbing on their mooring lines, looking chained to the waves. Oddly, these boats point toward the mouth of the harbor as though waiting for the sun to appear in the distance and warm away the chill grey air. The fog retreats more swiftly and a black silhouette begins to appear in the harbor opening. The island chain known as Martha's Vineyard looks close yet is three hours out by sail in a strong breeze and with a good man at the tiller. The gulls, full of fish and lazy, perch on the pilings to dry their feathers as the sun rises high enough to begin warming the air. Sunday sailors stroll onto the wharf and climb down to the boats. Others shove off from the beach in dinghies and row out to the deeper-hulled craft. Perhaps this is the day they will bring their boats out of the water to weather the winter in dry dock.

In other forgotten days the proud whalers called Mattapoisett home port. They grew here and were pushed into the sea at the very place the wharf is standing. A century ago the wives of sea-going men stood on the rise behind the wharf and searched the harbor mouth for a sign of a sail that would mean the end of months of wait and torment. On this rise now stands only a slender mast to mark the passage of time. It was the mizzenmast on the Wanderer, the last of the whalers built to sail out of Mattapoisett. The shortest of the Wanderer's three masts, it stands above the trees, pointing out across the harbor toward the islands where a stormy sea tossed the ship against the rocks one dark night to bring an end to an era. Little was found but this mast, floating among the rocks off Cuttyhunk Island.

A lone old fisherman, rod over his arm, bait can in a gnarled fist, walks slowly to the end of the wharf and sits on the edge. The gulls drop down behind him and wander near like tame pigeons. If by chance he has something to offer, they will not be too full of fish to accept. The old fisherman looks around him and pays more attention to the horizon than he does to his fishing. He is old enough to remember the days before the deep powerful throb of engines shattered the morning quiet or fiber-glass hulls gleamed in the sunlight. It was only forty years ago that the Wanderer went out on her last voyage.

MEALTIME'S A BREEZE WITH DAIRY FOODS

When June comes, can summer be far ahead? And summertime means a season of heavy exercise and light, nourishing foods to supply the vitality needed for outdoor activities. Meals are a breeze to make with versatile dairy foods, nature's own convenience products.

One menu might include Fancy Franks for a picnic lunch anywhere. Just heat 'em and eat 'em and taste buds will flower under the tang of Cheddar cheese combined with chili sauce. For a go-along side dish, why not try a Snappy Salad easily made with greens and bacon bits complemented by sauteed pecan pieces. Dessert could be a Frosty Apple Pie, a tasty crumb crust lined with melted chocolate and filled with Cinnamon-spiced apples with a vanilla ice cream topping.

Set a meal for a crowd in a lonely place quickly and easily from a toted refrigerated cooler and a portable barbecue grill. And don't forget to include milk to cool that warm weather thirst. Take it easy this summer--rely on dairy foods.

It's fun to eat outdoors, especially in the kick-off summer month of June. The weather is right for casual meals and the family's in the mood to pack a basket and have a happy time.

How about planning a meal you can tote along to the park, or pack for teenagers to take to the beach? There's a minimum of fuss involved in serving Fancy Franks; just heat 'em and eat 'em. No sand in the sandwiches with this recipe. (Sounds funny -- no "sand" in sandwiches.)

All you do is mix the delicious cheese filling at home, wrap the filled franks in aluminum foil and heat them later over the charcoal grill. The filling is simple to make. Just combine shredded Cheddar cheese, chili sauce, pickle relish, and a dash of oregano for zesty Italian flavor. Heat the foil wrapped sandwiches over glowing coals until the cheese melts and the franks are piping hot.

Take along a vacuum jug filled with icy-cold milk to drink, and for an easy dessert, pack Carry-Out Cupcakes in sturdy paper cups. They're a breeze to make with today's convenient prepared mixes. Use a yellow cake mix for the cupcakes and split them crosswise after baked and cooled. Then stir up a batch of chocolate pudding and pie filling mix; when slightly cooled, spoon a couple tablespoons into a paper cup. Top with the bottom half of a cupcake, add more pudding and then the top portion of the cake. A swirl of chocolate pudding crowns each individual dessert. Cover with transparent plastic wrap and they're ready to travel.

Try this tote-along menu soon. When you do, you'll agree that Fancy Franks, Carry-
